

Global Growth Strategy

Market Overview

Promising developments in Europe, including a successful buyback of Greek debt and the ECB’s announcement of the Outright Monetary Transactions program, boosted market sentiment during the quarter, as did stronger economic data from some of the larger emerging economies, most notably China. In the U.S., election results and political brinkmanship around the fiscal cliff unsettled Wall Street, although economic data continued to point to slow economic recovery. Meanwhile, market participants responded favorable to the re-election of Prime Minister Abe in Japan, and signs that he would more aggressively promote a pro-growth agenda.

During the quarter, the MSCI World Index returned 2.63% (3.07% in local currency terms). Geographically, the advance in the equity markets was broad based, with the exception of the U.S., where the S&P 500 Index declined 0.38%. Meanwhile, the MSCI Europe Index returned 7.06%; and the MSCI Japan Index returned 5.79%. Some of the concerns surrounding China and the rest of the BRIC economies dissipated during the quarter due to stronger economic data. Against this backdrop, the MSCI Emerging Markets Index returned 5.61% (5.36% in local currency terms).

Unlike the first half of the year which saw clear performance distinctions between “risk-on” and “risk-off” sectors, such trends were muted during the fourth quarter. Financials (+8.54%) and consumer discretionary (+6.50%) were the best performing sectors, while telecommunication services (-4.59%) and information technology (-3.21%) were the weakest performers.

Performance Review

The Calamos Global Growth Strategy underperformed the MSCI World Index (USD), returning -1.21% gross of fees (-1.51% net) versus 2.63% for the index. We share in our client’s disappointment that the recent performance of the strategy has fallen short of its longer-term record. As we discuss throughout this report, we are in the process of making adjustments to the portfolio, in keeping with our cautiously optimistic economic outlook and commitment to improving performance. During the quarter, most of the portfolio’s underperformance stemmed from its defensive posture, including an allocation to gold and an underweight position to financials. An overweight to information technology also detracted from relative performance.

During the quarter, the areas that had the most significant impact on performance were:

Materials. Security selection within the materials sector detracted from performance, particularly the portfolio’s allocation to gold. Gold mining companies have been particularly challenged by higher costs of extraction and production, as well as by the rising prices of mining infrastructure. While valuations and fundamentals of select firms within this industry remain attractive, during the fourth quarter we looked to reduce exposure to gold positions that were used as a global hedge against financial crises and further dollar debasement.

Information Technology. While security selection was additive, the portfolio’s overweight allocation to the information technology sector detracted value, as it was one of the weakest performing sectors within the index during the quarter. Within the sector, we continue to favor companies with cleaner balance sheets, higher cash flows and lower debt levels. As we have mentioned in the past, we believe that many companies in the information technology sector may benefit from many of the long-term secular growth themes that we have identified. These include demand for products and services that provide access to information, enhance productivity, enable mobility and promote innovation.

Financials. The portfolio’s underweight position to the financials sector hindered relative performance. Entering 2013, we are actively seeking out select opportunities within the sector. While there are still questions about the impacts of financial regulation and unresolved global economic debt problems, our outlook has become more positive due to factors including improving loan growth, attractive valuations, better prospects in the U.S. housing market and consumer resiliency.

Consumer Staples. Security selection within consumer staples enhanced relative returns, with outperformance in the beverages industry. Our emphasis remains on lower cost providers and firms that are targeting opportunities in growing emerging market middle class, such as brewers and soft drink companies with well recognized global brands.

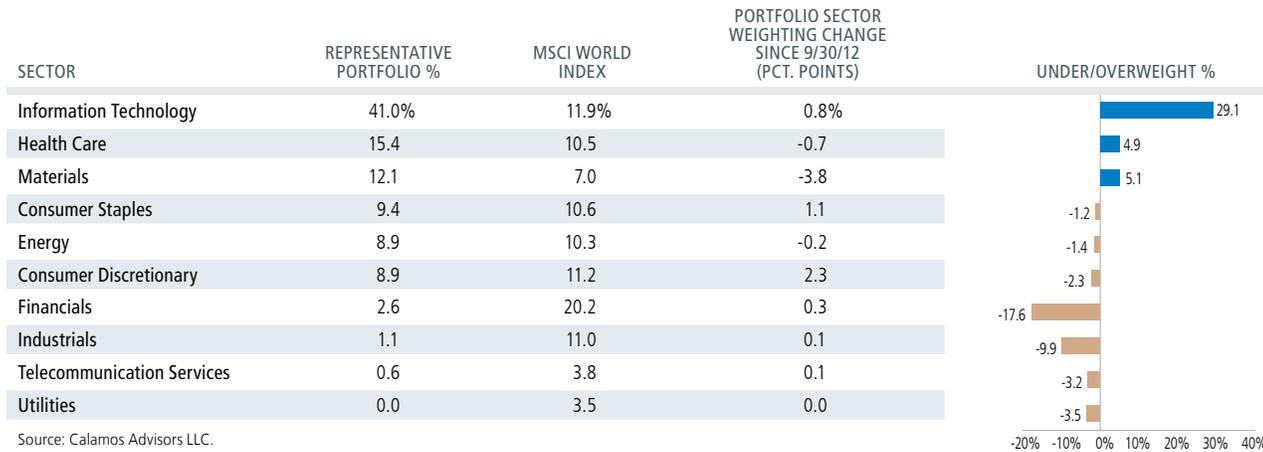

Geographic. The portfolio’s holdings within the United States, Canada, Israel and Australia detracted from performance. Holdings within Switzerland, and Brazil contributed to relative returns.

Positioning

We have positioned the portfolio to invest in higher secular growth businesses, such as information technology and health care. We are favoring companies that have strong global businesses and are able to tap into growth within emerging market economies. While we believe global economic growth will continue, we also anticipate ongoing volatility within the markets and therefore maintain a strong focus on risk management.

Materials. As mentioned above, during the fourth quarter we reduced our exposure to gold. We had thought that the strategy's gold holdings could benefit from coordinated global reflation efforts by central banks. The gold exposure was also intended to serve as a hedge against U.S. dollar weakness, as well as against a potential inflation shock and contagion in the financial system. However, the allocation did not perform as expected. Securities did not perform in line with the underlying commodity and market sentiment was more positive on the whole than we had thought it would be, given macro uncertainties. We may continue to invest in gold companies, however, when we believe opportunities are compelling on the basis of individual company fundamentals.

Consumer Discretionary. We slightly increased the portfolio's exposure to consumer discretionary during the quarter. Within this area, we favor companies that have stable balance sheets, strong global brands and global business strategies. We see a resilient consumer in the U.S. as well as an increasingly powerful one in the emerging markets, particularly given recent indications of a rebound in China.

Geographic. During the period, we slightly increased the portfolio's allocation to emerging markets. The portfolio is underweight to both the U.S. and Japan relative to the index. We will be closely monitoring changes in the Japanese economy, in the wake of the re-election of Prime Minister Abe and recent stimulus package announced by the BOJ.

Outlook

Our global outlook is one of cautious optimism. We believe markets are returning to more of a bottom-up focus, with greater distinctions being made on fundamentals. Even given the recent strong performance within the global equity markets, we believe the valuations of many global growth equities remain attractive.

For example, in the U.S., corporate earnings have been solid, fueling most of the U.S. market gains, as valuations, when viewed on trailing earnings, have risen only modestly (from 13.08 at year-end 2011 to 14.50 at year-end 2012). Corporate balance sheets are robust and consumers have been resilient on the whole. Earnings growth remains one area of potential concern, as it has shown weakness as of late.

We expect continued financial market volatility as the euro zone works to better integrate and strengthen its members' balance sheets and as the U.S. government undertakes what will likely be ugly debt ceiling debates. There will continue to be near-term issues (there always are), but we believe investors will be well served by not letting short-term political volatility dominate investment decisions.
