WEEKLY HEADLINES

Does Alphabetical Order Offer an Unfair Advantage in 401(k) Options?

Though suspected for a while, a new bias in 401(k) investing—"alphabetical bias"—has been confirmed by a recent paper in the academic journal The Financial Review, as reported by Pensions & Investments. Investments that appear higher up on alphabetically listed lineups are what participants select the most. The bias exists regardless of the length of the lineup, surfacing even in plans with fewer than 10 fund choices.

Study sponsors expressed surprise at the magnitude of the bias: Funds that appear at the top of the list receive roughly a 20% higher allocation than those that appear at the bottom.

Since at least 2007, most plan lineups are typically organized by asset class, which are then alphabetized (there is no word whether the order advantages Alternatives). Two ideas proposed by the study: that sponsors and record keepers list investments options in ascending order by expense ratio or by the level of fund volatility.
