WEEKLY HEADLINES

Options-based Funds: Right Idea, Be Sure of the Execution

If your intent is to hedge equity, focus on a fund's record in hedging the downside. That's the message of a recent Calamos blog post commenting on last week's surge in options-based funds, reflecting investment professionals' anticipation of continued equity volatility. Flows into both open-end funds and ETFs totaled $851 billion in the week of Oct. 7, far exceeding flows into other liquid alts categories. As shown in the chart below, that was the year's best for the category, topping strong flows in early March and July. The category led the week of Oct. 17, too, although at a lower level (see table below).

The post also looks at the performance of the Morningstar category average during drawdowns. When the S&P 500 has drawn down more than 5% since 2015, the S&P declined an average -11.66% vs. the -6.84% category average. The S&P lost -19.05% and the average of the category fell -12.43% during >10% drawdowns.

Economic Releases vs. Consensus (week of 10/12)

CPI/Core CPI: 1.4%/1.7% vs. 1.4%/1.8%
