WEEKLY HEADLINES

Interest Surges in Options-based Alts

Spiking interest this year in the Morningstar Options-based Funds category, as tracked weekly by the Snapshot, reflects a re-evaluation of equity risk. A Calamos blog post last week reviewed the heightened interest in hedging strategies, which surged in early March and again in July.

Having attracted $3.5 billion in net flows through July 17, the category is almost double the $1.8 billion in net flows for all of last year. And, that was a year when the category was the fastest growing liquid alts category (see Liquid Alternatives: 2019 Year in Review).

Significant differences in options strategies—both their advantages and their limitations—can be revealed during market drawdowns, according to the post. Performance results vary based on: use of puts and percentage of portfolio hedged, frequency of when hedges are reset and whether the resets are or preordained, underlying equity positions, whether active or index-based, and guidelines for calls written.
