WEEKLY HEADLINES

Swift Market Recovery Means Equity-heavy Portfolios May Still Need Rebalancing

Contrary to what might have been anticipated, the market's swift descent into bear territory did not significantly reset the stock and bond mix in portfolios. Because the market recovered in 126 trading days (versus a peak to recovery average of 1,542 days), equity allocations dipped ever so slightly and bounced right back.

The 60/40 portfolio that headed into the COVID-19 crisis with equity allocations that had appreciated well beyond 60% still represents substantially more risk, Calamos reported in a blog post last week. A 60/40 portfolio created in December 2009 by December 2019 had grown into 79% equities and 21% fixed income. The equity portion slipped to 77% by the end of March 2020, but the mix was back up to 79% by the end of 6/30 (see chart below).

Since the market didn't do it for them, the post concludes, investment professionals may still need to take steps to de-risk.

Economic Releases vs. Consensus (week of 8/17)
