WEEKLY HEADLINES

One-year Later: Are Investors Invigorated?

At the one-year anniversary of the S&P 500 low on March 23, 2020, several publications took stock of the U.S. equity market's progress since:

- The S&P 500 has now gained 76% since its lowest point one year ago. It was the best 12-month performance for the S&P 500 since 1936.
- Last Monday, March 22, the VIX fell to 18.8—its lowest level since Feb. 3, 2020, and a measure of investors' heightened risk appetite, according to Fundstrat.
- February's record $38 billion inflows for U.S. equity funds "are still a blip relative to the $228 billion of outflows over the trailing 12 months, but they may be a sign that investors aren't shying away from equities despite markets nearing all-time highs," said Morningstar in an analysis of fund flows. "Rising interest rates and a swing in equity market leadership during February "seemed to invigorate investors rather than scare them off." And, see chart in bottom right.
