WEEKLY HEADLINES

Flows Up, Fees Down—Barron's Declares A 'Liquid Alts 2.0'

Credit elevated stock prices, rising interest rates and inflation worries with fueling a resurgent interest in liquid alternatives, according to Friday's Barron's. Alts are seeing inflows for the first time since 2014—prompting the publication to declare a Liquid Alts 2.0 underway.

With the vaunted 60% equities, 40% bonds asset allocation portfolio under pressure, "rising yields make bonds lose value and thus less able to cushion the equities portion...Alternatives, in theory, increase the cushion by diversifying into other investments."

"This year," according to Barron's, "there's a class of investors who are more willing to educate themselves about the limitations of alternative investments—and an asset class that's more likely to survive as a result."

The article reviews the three "buckets" represented by alts: return enhancers, diversifiers and volatility dampeners. It comments on alts' 2020 performance, fund expenses, new product development, and categories (such as long/short equity) that "are on the mend."
